Golden Gate

The Golden Gate bridge in San Francisco was completed on May 26, 1937. It has the world's longest single span of 4,200 feet between two towers. The bridge connects to Fort Point, a distance of 92,000 feet, 220 feet above the tide. The towers soar 746 feet each, carrying a load of 210,000,000 pounds.

Geologists believe the bay was once a river gorge. Erosion scored a channel permitting the Pacific to submerge all but the peaks of its hills. The building of the south tower's foundation was considered impossible because of the swift tidal flow, the working gorges were tossed continually by swells as high as 15 feet. Engineers, with earthquakes in mind, build the bridges so it could sway 21 feet in either direction.

The Golden Gate Bridge is one of the great wonders of our time. The Golden Gate Restaurant is one of the great places to dine... Please join us...
